PREFACE

The Names Project team is an informal research group that meets at the Centre for English Cultural Tradition and Language at the University of Sheffield. It grew out of a class provided by the Division of Continuing Education and tutored by Professor John Widdowson and Dr David Hey, which was concerned with the origins of surnames.

The team is now researching the origins and spread of South Yorkshire surnames, particularly those found in and around Sheffield. Individual names are traced backwards in time and databases for the whole area are being formed from the 1379 poll tax returns, the 1672 hearth tax returns and the 1986 telephone directories. This edition of the hearth tax returns is a first step in providing basic information for the project, but it will also be of great benefit to family and local historians who are pursuing their own interests. It will enable comparisons to be made with other returns that are in print, notably those for Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. (1)

The manuscript of the returns is housed at the Wakefield Metropolitan District Council Library Headquarters, Balne Lane, Wakefield. We are indebted to Mr John Goodchild, M. Univ., the Archivist, for his kindness in allowing us to make a microfilm copy. An edited version of the original returns, which was made for the central government and is now housed in the Public Record Office (2), has been consulted for comparative purposes by use of the microfilm copy at Sheffield Archives. These returns are a vital source of information in assessing the distribution of surnames three centuries or so after most of them had become hereditary. This assessment is now in progress. In the meantime, it is hoped that this publication will be of use to people who are pursuing their private research and to those numerous others who are interested in the local history of South Yorkshire.

INTRODUCTION

The hearth tax returns of the 1660s and 1670s are a major source of information for the family historian and the local historian. They are the records of taxes collected between 1662 and 1668 by the central government, taxes that were based on the number of hearths or chimneys that a house possessed. Householders were charged at the rate of two shillings per annum upon each hearth, unless they were exempted on the grounds of their poverty. The revenue that was raised in this way formed a major part of the government's income, but the tax was unpopular and was abandoned after the 1688 revolution.

The surviving returns are mostly housed at the old Public Record Office in Chancery Lane, London, under the reference E179. No county has a complete set of records and in some parts the survival rate is disappointing. The fullest return for South Yorkshire - defined as the two wapentakes of Strafford & Tickhill and Staincross - is that for Ladyday (25th March), 1672. Two copies of the return survive, one at the P.R.O. (1) and the other at Wakefield Metropolitan District Council Library Headquarters. It is clear from a study of these two documents that the Wakefield return is the original one, presumably made for the sheriff of the West Riding, and that an edited version was subsequently drawn up and forwarded to London. This edition is therefore a transcript of the Wakefield return.

The history of the administration of the tax is well set out in J V Beckett's introduction to W F Webster, ed. Nottinghamshire Hearth Tax, 1664 : 1674 (2). At the time of the 1672 return, government policy was to appoint a receiver and a team of collectors, who then sought the co-operation of local constables in calculating and collecting the tax. Four collectors - Robert Moore, Robert Bennett, Thomas Middleton and Robert Corner - were appointed for the two wapentakes that cover the area that we know as South Yorkshire. The division of Yorkshire into three ridings, which in turn were divided for administrative, military and judicial purpose into wapentakes, goes back to Viking times. A wapentake was the northern equivalent of the southern hundred. The smallest unit of local government was the township, which had its own constable and its own overseers of the poor and of the highways. Occasionally, the old Viking word, bierlow, was used as a variant on township. The hearth tax was collected through the administrative structure of townships and wapentakes. These are depicted on the accompanying map.

The collector and the constable had the power to enter houses to check on the number of hearths in use. Houses that had been taxed in previous years but had since been demolished or stood empty were noted as such and if there was doubt as to whether a tenant was moving out, the owner was recorded as being liable to pay. Much new building is apparent from the returns, with additional hearths or new houses frequently noted as not being liable until the tax was next collected at Michaelmas (29th September) or the following Ladyday. Those who were exempted on the grounds of their poverty were expected to produce a printed certificate to this effect. 'Ced' was then noted against their names in the return. However, other householders were recorded as 'poore', perhaps after they had made a late case for exemption. In the whole of the wapentake of Staincross, only 56 poor people (3.46%) were recorded. In most parts of England the exemption rates were as high as 30%-40%, so it seems that in Staincross the poor were noted only in cases of uncertainty about the legitimacy of a claim. In Strafforth wapentake about 11% of households were said to be poor, but this average disguises wide variations. Here again we do not seem to have a complete record. Many of the poorest families are missing.

Some allowance for these unrecorded poor families must be made in any estimates of the total population that are based upon these returns. The tax was levied on households and only the names of the heads of households are recorded. It is clear from studies in many different parts of the country that the great majority of households consisted of nuclear families of no more than father, mother, children and perhaps an apprentice and/or a domestic servant. A multiplier of 4.75 is generally accepted as a reasonable average when estimating household size. If we then inflate the figures to allow uniform exemption rates of 35 % and 40 %, we arrive at a total population figure for the whole of South Yorkshire of just under 50,000.

Table 1: Estimated Population of South Yorkshire, 1672.

Wapentake	Households	x 4.75	35% exempt	40% exempt
Lower Strafforth	2,502	11,884	14,736	15,330
Upper Strafforth	3,813	18,111	22,458	23,363
Staincross	1,618	7,685	10,106	10,490
Totals	7,933	37,680	47,300	49,183

The population was still overwhelmingly rural and even those people who lived in towns dwelt in small communities. Sheffield had begun to outgrow Doncaster, but even if we allow for under-recording of the poorest families it contained no more than about 600 households. Rotherham was about half that size and Barnsley was considerably smaller. Tickhill (recorded in three parts under West Gate, North Gate and Sunderland) retained some of its medieval importance, but Bawtry, the only other place to rank as a town in the Middle Ages, was smaller than some of the villages. The industrial growth of the metalworking region around Sheffield is reflected in the size of the rural population. The shrinkage - sometimes to the point of desertion - of other communities is particularly marked in the central, agricultural parts of the county. By 1672 the former settlements at Langthwaite and Tilts had gone completely and those at Aldwarke, Chevitt, Frickley, Hampole, Nostell, Scawsby, Stone, Stotfield and Stubbs, etc. were marked by a handful of houses, sometimes only one. But in the lowlands to the east of Doncaster, Thorne had become a thriving port and market centre and every township thereabouts recorded flourishing communities of small farmers. The area once covered by Hatfield Chase was able to support as many families as did the industrial villages on the edge of the Pennines, including some with Dutch or Flemish names who had settled in the Levels after Vermuyden's drainage project in the late 1620s. The different character of the various parts of South Yorkshire is thus immediately apparent from these returns.

The importance of the metal trades in and around Sheffield is obvious from the number of workshops or 'smithies' that are recorded. The Cutlers' Company waged a protracted battle to avoid paying tax on their industrial hearths. The wording of the act was open to different interpretations of this point. Sir John Reresby, JP, of Thrybergh Hall was approached to use his influence at Court after the company had spent £200 in lobbying without success. More effectively, the receiver was bribed with presentation sets of knives and forks. (3) While the issue was unresolved, the collectors distinguished the smithies from the domestic hearths in their returns. We are thus able to see why Hallamshire was already famous throughout the land for its cutlery, its edge tools and its nails. Long before the Industrial Revolution, south-west Yorkshire had acquired a distinctive character as one of England's leading industrial districts.

The number of hearths in a house gives a broad indication of the wealth and social standing of the occupants. (In towns, some of the buildings with the largest number of hearths were the inns.) A social pyramid, based on the numerous families with only one or two hearths and tapering to a small number of rich gentry, is observable throughout the country, though the social structure of neighbouring communities could vary sharply. For example, Cawthorne had many middling families with three or four hearths, while Bretton had a squire with 13 hearths, a family with two hearths and nine others with only one. The nobility and gentry are quickly recognisable not only from the high number of hearths but from their descriptions as Right Honourable, Esquire or Mr and Mrs. The most prominent citizens in Doncaster were addressed as Alderman. Everybody else was plain Ralph Carr, Widow Mathewman, etc. It was not yet the fashion to have more than one Christian name, and it was normal for widows to be listed in that way.

The largest house in South Yorkshire in 1672 was Sheffield Manor Lodge, the former seat of the Earls of Shrewsbury, which was divided between two of the Duke of Norfolk's officers, Mr Ratcliffe (36 hearths) and Mr Nevill (21 hearths). This building had been erected in two campaigns during the sixteenth century; it was reduced to its present ruinous condition during the first decade of the eighteenth century. Wentworth Woodhouse was the next largest building with 43 hearths; from the 1720s onwards it was rebuilt as a 'Whig Palace' in Baroque and Palladian styles. In fact, hardly any of the larger houses survive in a recognisable form. Some, such as Nevitt (33), Hooton Levitt (30) and Edlington (21), have disappeared without trace, some like Tankersley (25), Thorpe Salvin (20) and Rotherham College (14) are merely ruins, and others were replaced by grander houses during the later seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Thus, Sir Thomas Osborne rebuilt Kiveton in the 1690s after he was created Duke of Leeds, Bretton Hall and Nostell Priory were completely rebuilt in Palladian style in the 1720s and 1730s and other halls such as those at Wortley, High Melton, Ravenfield and Wadworth were totally reconstructed a little later. One of the few large houses to remain intact (though it too has been radically altered in its internal design) is the house that Ralph Hansby had recently erected within the ruins of Tickhill Castle (24). At Stainborough we can witness the progress of Sir Gervase Cutler's new house, where five of the eleven hearths were 'not yet finished': this building survives as a range within a much grander eighteenth century house which was renamed Wentworth Castle.

Some of the homes of the minor gentry and substantial yeomen still adorn our countryside, including timber-framed houses such as Hound Hill (Mr Richard Elmhirst, 11) and Brampton Hall (7) and stone, gabled structures with mullioned windows such as Worsbrough Hall (Henry Edmonds, esquire, 13), Rockley Hall (Mr Hayforth and others, 11), Water Hall, Penistone (Josias Wadsworth, 7), Bullhouse Hall (Mr Silvanus Rich, 6) and Ecclesfield Hall (Mr Robert Greene, 6). About 20 parsonages can readily be identified from the returns, ranging in size from three to eight hearths, but none of these apparently survives. The school at Laughton (2), which was built during the second decade of the seventeenth century, still fulfils its old function opposite the church, but most schoolhouses appear only under the master's name. Worsbrough corn mill, which is now a working museum, is one of 27 mills recorded and no doubt local research could identify others. The bakehouses or 'common ovens' have all gone, and so have two of the most curious structures that were recorded in the returns - the heated dog kennels at High Melton Hall and Wadworth Hall!

These brief remarks indicate some of the uses to which local historians can put these returns. Their principal value, however, lies in the information they provide about the stock of family names. At one level, the distribution of a surname can guide a family historian to a parish register where an ancestor might be traced. At another level, that distribution may point to the original home of a surname. Many of our surnames are of single-family origin and are often derived from the name of an isolated farm. By 1672 many families had still not travelled very far from their place of origin. The Bilcliffes and Biltcliffes were - and, indeed, still are - concentrated within a few miles of the Pennine farm of that name in Langsett township, the Broomheads lived fairly close to Broomhead Hall in the chapelry of Bradfield, the Bulluses or Bullases can be seen to have come from Bullhouse in Thurlstone township, the Staniforths from a lost place-name near Wincobank, where a stony ford crossed the river Don, or perhaps the Blackburn Brook, and the Creswicks had not ventured far from the hamlet of that name near Ecclesfield. These examples could be multiplied many times. Many of the names that occur in these returns were recorded three centuries earlier when a poll tax was levied in 1379. Names of mysterious origin, like Shemeld, names that had been derived from far-away places, such as Scargill, and obscure occupational surnames, such as Crapper, had become distinctive local names since the fourteenth century. The hearth tax returns provide a convenient base at which to assess the development of local surnames midway between their formation and the present day.

CONVENTIONS

Original spellings have been retained, except that where 'ff' is used at the beginning of a name it has been printed in the modern manner as 'F'. Abbreviations have been expanded only when they cannot be reproduced by modern typesetting and in certain other cases: 'tent' is written as 'tenant', 'Sr' as 'Sir', 'Cler' as 'Clerk'. and the various ways of abbreviating 'senior' and 'junior' have been standardised as 'Sen.' and 'Jun.'.

The aim has been to publish as accurate a transcript as possible, even where clerical error on the part of the original compiler is suspected, eg. in the return for Austerfield the surname Bolegate is immediately followed by that of Holegate. The return is written in a fair hand and does not present undue difficulties to anyone familiar with seventeenth century handwriting. The interpretation of capital letters has occasionally been problematical.
